

Session Effects of Remedial Measures

- Capping is an effective (low tech) remediation measure
- Turbidity levels alone do not make dredging environmental friendly, fluxes are a better criterium
- Sufficient information on the spatial and temporal variation in sediment contamination is very important for the design and monitoring of remedial measures
- The BATNEEC principle is important for designing remedial measures in urban areas
- Communication is important to successfully integrate sediment remediation in development plans